Time to Reflect*

As the year begins, time should be taken by each of us to reflect on the events of the past 12 months. This is a great time to review how we obtained the goals we set out to accomplish back in January 2008. Did we achieve what we set out to do? Did we try? Did we give it all we could with out any regrets? Or did our proposed goals loom over like a dark cloud, shadowing our every step, reminding us of our shortcomings?

If we go back and examine what we made as goals, would we find that we set them too high? Were these goals really attainable or were we setting ourselves up to fail?

Setting goals can be like the snowball effect. If we set them too high, we tend to never achieve anything we set out to do. But, if we set realistic, attainable goals, that momentum of accomplishment will propel us to strive harder and higher to get to the next level of success.

Hapkido provides us the opportunity to set goals - many, with consistent training, attainable. True, some take longer than others to achieve but during the journey we find new heights to soar.

Why would you set goals if you have no intentions of meeting them? But if used properly, goal setting can be a way for individuals to structure constant success one step at a time.

PERSONAL VICTORY AND YOU

As we look to a new year, and our training, learning and teaching continue to grow, how will you incorporate the concept of personal victory in your life and the lives of others? Previous articles have addressed concepts such as elements of technique, learning principles, class planners, principles of teaching, and what it means to be a teacher. All of those can be lost to us as students and teachers if we are unable to find personal victory in what we do.

Personal victories are the small things that keep us returning to class. Personal victories are the small things that keep teachers teaching. Personal victories can be those things that only you may know occur: feeling good because you helped someone in class, feeling challenged to learn something new, feeling joy as you watch your son, daughter, shy student or even self grow in confidence. People often fall short of long term goals if short terms victories are not recognized. Set short-term goals for yourself, and those who may be your junior. Notice the progress in others, and acknowledge it in yourself. Sometimes we teach best what we need to learn most. We are leaders, and if we lead by example then we share our personal victory with others as a teaching tool. Sometimes we forget how our juniors struggle with things we now find second nature. Sharing our journey and challenges allows us to remain humble, while using our challenges as teaching moments.

As we plan on coming together as a WHA family in February at the annual camp, and continue as WHA members with common goals, let us remember that we are always students and always teachers. We are always beginners on a long road with various new paths, and always leaders as we share ourselves with others. Best wishes to all for a peaceful, blessed and wonderfully painful Hapkido New Year.
